NOTES.— Recruited and organized at Troy, N. Y. It was mustered into the United States service August 29, 1862, and left the State immediately, en route for Harper's Ferry, where it was captured on September 15th, at the surrender of that post. The captured garrison was immediately paroled, the One Hundred and Twenty-fifth proceeding to Annapolis, from whence it was sent to a paroled camp at Chicago, Ill., there to await notice of its exchange. After a two months' stay at Chicago, the men were declared exchanged, upon which the regiment returned to Virginia. During the winter and spring of 1863 it was encamped at Centreville, Va., where it was attached to General Alex. Hays's Brigade. In June, 1863, that command joined the Army of the Potomac, and marched with it to Gettysburg, where Colonel Willard was killed while in command of the brigade, the regiment losing there 26 killed, 104 wounded, and 9 missing. At Gettysburg the One Hundred and Twenty-fifth was in Alex. Hays's (3d) Division, Second Corps; and it fought under Hays again at Bristoe Station, an action in which the regiment particularly distinguished itself by its dash and intrepid bearing in a critical situation. In 1864, it was transferred to Barlow's (1st) Division, and took a prominent part in the bloody fighting about Spotsylvania. Lieutenant-Colonel Myer fell mortally wounded at the battle of the Wilderness. The casualties in the regiment at the Wilderness were 6 killed, 17 wounded, and 5 missing; at Po River and Spotsylvania, 10 killed, 74 wounded, and 6 missing; at North Anna and Totopotomoy, 5 killed and 6 wounded. It commenced the final campaign of 1865 with 12 officers and 219 men "present for duty," although the names of 547 men were still carried on the rolls.
